

Indigenous Centre for Cumulative Effects Youth Network

WHAT IS THE ICCE YOUTH NETWORK

The ICCE Youth Network is a new program, and we really want to hear from you about how to build this youth-led initiative. We're designing this together, so your ideas and feedback are crucial to making it work.

We're creating a space where youth can connect with each other, build impactful relationships, and lead important conversations about cumulative effects. Think of it as your platform to network, learn, and make things happen.

We know this work matters and can create real change, we want to put youth ideas, fresh perspectives, and your voices front and center. Youth see things differently, and that's exactly what these conversations need.

OPPORTUNITY FOR INDIGENOUS YOUTH

We're looking for 4 First Nations, Inuit, or Métis youth ambassadors to help lead this network and make it happen. These aren't just volunteer roles - we're serious about supporting young leaders in this work.

As an ambassador, you'll team up with ICCE staff to attend community events where you'll share what we're doing, promote the Youth Network, and help people understand why cumulative effects work matters. Think of it as being a spokesperson for youth voices for cumulative effects.

If the ambassador role isn't right for you, no worries - you can still be part of the network as a member and get involved in different ways that work for your schedule and interests.

For more information or to self nominate please contact:

Sileema Igutsaq Angoyuak
sileema.angoyuak@icce-caec.ca

Leah Harrison
leah.harrison@icce-caec.ca